Summary of Key Findings

Key Findings

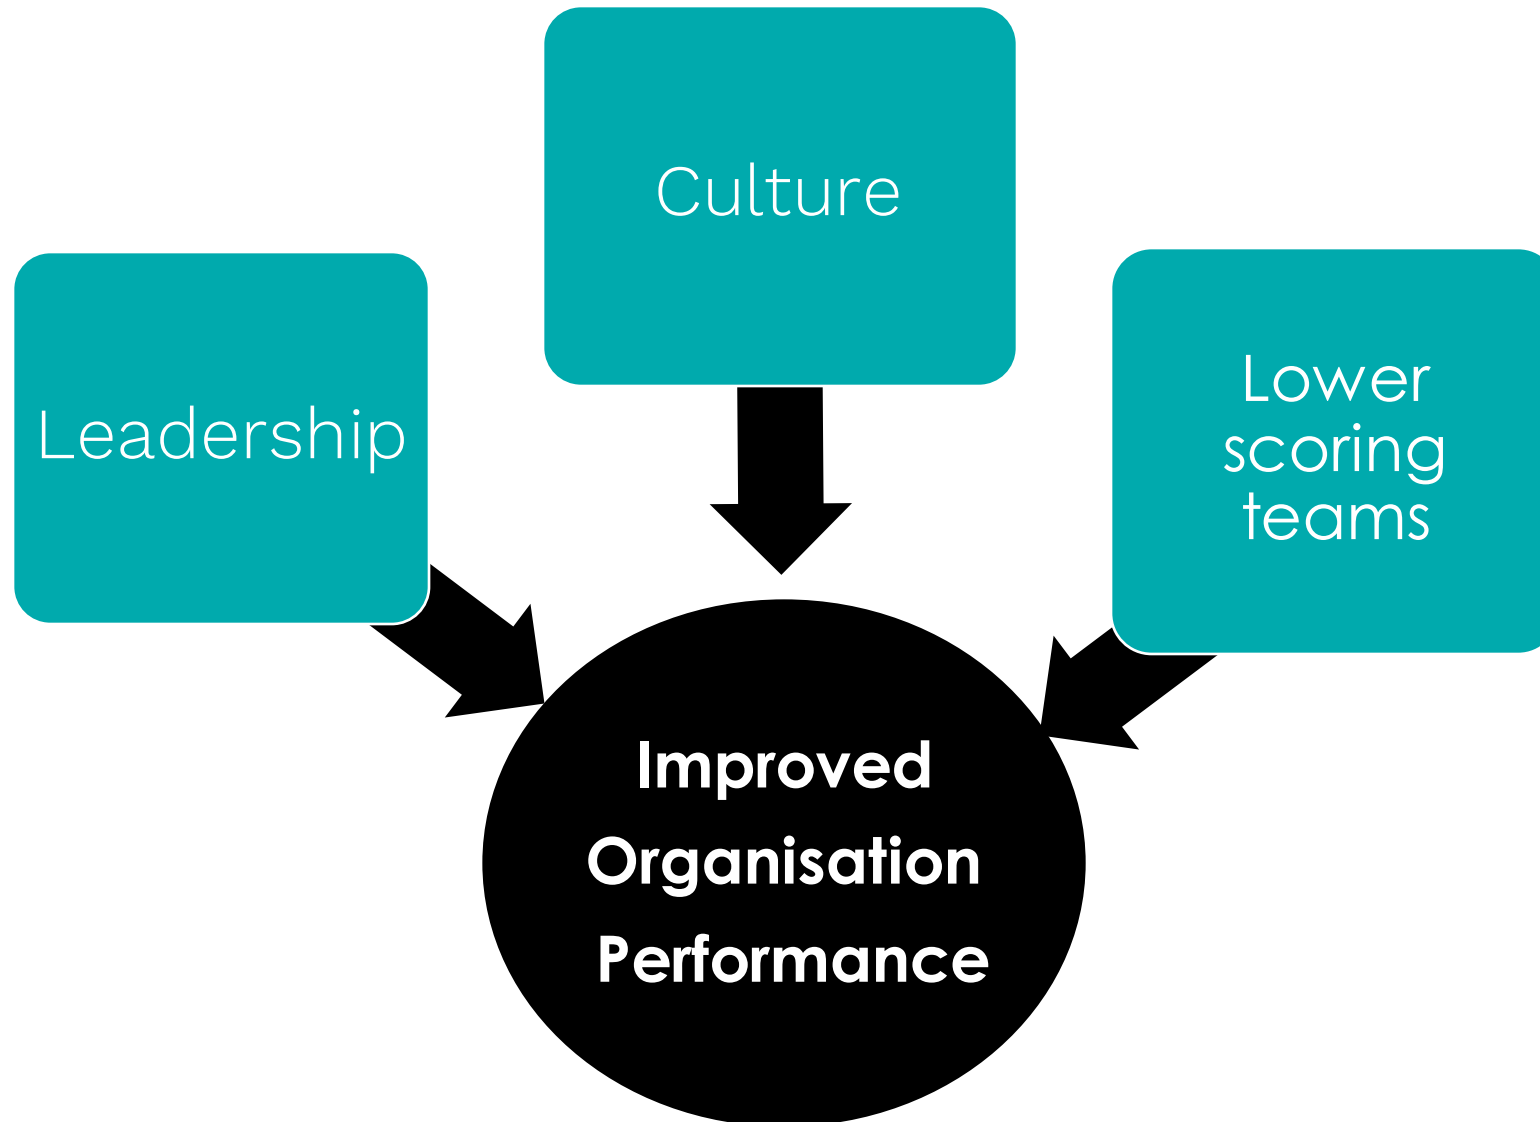

- Given this is the first AskYourTeam survey, the participation rate of 57% is encouraging. However the key to higher levels moving forward to provide a stronger representation of organisation wide views, will be actions taken for improvements as a result of this survey feedback. Thanking people for their contribution and communication around next steps will be crucial.
- The overall average organisation score of 57% and coincidentally the People Score of 57% is an indication that across all areas there is the opportunity, need and desire for improvements.
- Benchmarking CCC results with the AskYourTeam local government clients indicates CCC is 8% below benchmark and in terms of the five CCC focus areas there is opportunity to grow performance..
- Confidence in cultural competence is the standout area of greatest confidence which is a positive achievement. Continuing this work is recommended.
- It is also positive to see the importance of ratepayers/community as high importance and not surprisingly there is a reasonable sense of pride amongst staff regarding the impact CCC has on its community.
- There is a lack of confidence and satisfaction in leadership across the organisation with some teams seriously lacking. Free text comments also refer to low trust, confidence in ELT and wider leadership based on some perceived negative behaviours, ineffective communication and a strong sense that ELT is not connected nor visible to the majority of the organisation. This perceived disconnection is evidenced by wide and significant alignment gaps where ELT is significantly more confident and satisfied than both wider leadership teams and the rest of the organisation. It is strongly recommended that in order to build confidence in this crucial area, that ELT consider workshopping what is driving this lack of confidence and identify some positive change actions which can be implemented. Closing the gap in perception between ELT and the organisation across all areas will enable a more cohesive inclusive and empowering leadership culture to emerge.
- Leadership behaviour and practice is not viewed as consistent and whilst some teams appear to be more satisfied than others there high proportions of teams where dissatisfaction is widespread. There are some perceptions that ELT are so disconnected they are oblivious of low morale.
- There is a concerning perception that the culture across the organisation has deteriorated and is not a culture of empowerment. Some references to perceived bullying intimidating behaviours particularly from levels of leadership, lack of trust permeating both from and towards ELT and the significant disconnect across departments and from leaders indicate that a low and disempowered morale prevails across much of the organisation. Concerns about feeling safe to tell the truth and around honesty not being valued, also by ELT, are indications that psychologically safety needs to be built. Building trust and a more positive culture will be closely aligned with positive change in ELT and wider leadership and will take time. Compromised staff wellbeing particularly across the lower scoring areas indicates potential organisation risk to wellbeing and it is recommended that the low scoring teams to these and intimidating behaviour questions are prioritised for delving deeper in order to identify key drivers.

- Communication needs to be improved across the board including ELT. To break down silo's and demonstrate an intent to change we recommend a deliberate period of resetting communication as a very visible indication that the commitment to meaningful change is real. People want to feedback more and for their feedback to be valued – involve staff in identifying solutions and how this can be best achieved, what channels and communication content is desired, and set expectations.
- It appears teams are not closely aligned, and collaboration needs to improve to lift performance. This is not only linked to communication but leadership also where increased understanding of the links to strategy and vision as well as values will assist alignments of teams. Individual team performance is also identified as needing more focus, as is celebration of team and individual achievements which will contribute to lifting empowerment.
- Project planning, management, implementation and review are all areas where people see substantial opportunity for improvement. There is strong consensus that more work on upfront planning and requirements definition, robust cost/benefit analysis, improved testing and post implementation reviews could all be done better. Ensuring projects are properly resourced for their duration to avoid a backlog of unfinished tasks and multiple long term change requests is recommended.
- Technology, business processes and systems are not considered as effective as they should or could be. Making focused and prioritized improvements to key elements will enable effectiveness and efficiencies to be achieved, relieve frustration and enhance job satisfaction.
- Poor performance is not perceived, across the organisation including ELT, as being well managed. Ensuring managers are well equipped and familiar with processes to effectively identify and manage poor performance and also setting expectations around this confidential process will positively impact motivation and satisfaction.
- The main bone of contention is around remuneration where people feel overworked, over stressed and under paid. High staff turnover, also impacted by vaccine mandates has left many in the organisation feeling overworked, stressed and undervalued both by recognition of contribution but also in terms of remuneration. Perceptions around disparity is strong. There appears significant demotivation and resentment in play across a wide cross section of staff and if not in play already, discussions around plans and expectations would begin the process of breaking down these potential barriers to achieving a more empowered and motivated workforce.
- In summary there is a compelling need and desire for positive change. Lifting confidence, trust in and satisfaction with leadership and culture are recommended as the key focus areas. Communication is inherent within these two key areas and once confidence builds in positive change being committed to and led by ELT and wider leadership, the improvement journey will springboard further and widespread improvements.
